Wine critics. Where do we start? It can be a contentious subject, and as usual we're happy to get under the hood, dig around a little and give you our considered opinion. There is a place for some sort of assessment; with so many wines out there, an informative – and easy to understand! – guide to help one through the labyrinthine options can be a useful thing. And remember, it can be extremely subjective. One person's exhilarating elixir will invariably be another's unpalatable poison.

The critics? They come in a number of guises: you have the individuals who have over time carved out a reputation for themselves and stand as some towering vinous colossus dispensing their wine knowledge. Robert Parker springs to mind, but he is not alone. There are the likes of Jancis Robinson, James Suckling, Hugh Johnson, Neal Martin and James Halliday to name just a handful. Then there are the magazines, with their teams of experts, devoted to the in-depth evaluation of all things wine-related. Notable examples are The Wine Advocate, Wine Spectator, Decanter and Winestate. And finally we have the wine competitions, organised events where panels of learned experts assess and rate the wines submitted to them, normally on the basis of a blind tasting. There are, of course, scores of these globally, and far too many to list.

Wine competitions have been around for many years, and gaining acclaim is, naturally enough, something that winemakers aspire to. Standards and recognition can be important, but are these various accolades all alike? Not really; there's the 20-point scale, the 100-point rating system, the star system, etc. Obviously the options are verging on boundless, and thus run the risk of more confusion, so inside we feature a cross-section of critical options, a small selection of the best, the most influential, the most well-run and respected wine authorities.

So back to the subjective thing: it depends on your taste, your experience, and then there's whether it's a root, leaf or flower day. Winestate is quite fascinating, in that it is possible for a wine to receive different ratings over time from the same publication. Why? Because it's tasted at different times, and one of the beauties of wine is that it doesn't stand still; it evolves. Of course the whole thing is radically skewed by the fact that when it comes to competitions, large amounts of money can change hands in the form of entry fees, and medals can be handed out by the hundreds, if not thousands for some of the larger events. All of which can render the whole exercise meaningless in terms of working out what's actually worth drinking.

In the end, it's just good to compare notes with someone. Face to face, perhaps over a glass of the tippable being discussed. Here at Glengarry we've been immersed in this world for almost fifty years. We know stuff – how could you not, after all that time? We taste a host of wines every month, and we hold many public tastings and run our Wine Academy, all with the aim of intriguing, educating and upskilling you, our customers. Because at the end of the day, the best thing of all, surely, is for you to cut out the middle-man and become your own personal expert.

Cheers!

PEGASUS BAY

This well-respected family winery was founded by neurologist Ivan Donaldson, with the first vines planted in the Waipara Valley in 1986. Ivan and Christine Donaldson, along with their three sons, are involved in all aspects of the winery's operation, from vineyard management to winemaking to marketing and the running of their award-winning restaurant.

The family are firm believers in natural and low-impact methods of cultivation. Ivan oversees the vineyard, which is sustainably managed on a low-cropping regime to provide the best possible fruit to the winemaking team led by Ivan's eldest son, Matthew. Matthew has adopted a minimal intervention approach throughout the entire winemaking operation, utilising modern techniques combined with traditional winemaking methods to create wines with varietal integrity and an individual sense of place.

The Pegasus Bay range is produced exclusively from estate-grown fruit, while the second-tier Main Divide wines are made from a combination of fruit off the estate and from other Waipara growers. Pegasus Bay also produce a range of super premium reserve wines, made in small quantities and only in the best years.

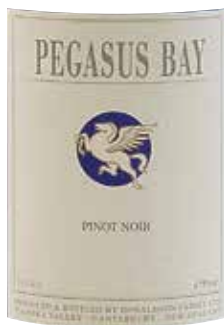

The Donaldson Family's toil and commitment over many years has earned Pegasus Bay countless awards and accolades throughout the world, including an outstanding 5-star rating from the not easily impressed Robert Parker.

WINE CRITICS

PROFOUND OR PRETENTIOUS?

ROBERT PARKER

If there's something strange in your wine cellar, who you gonna call? The world's most influential wine writer, that's who. There is not another wine critic in the world that has had as much written, or said, about them as American Robert Parker.

Parker founded The Wine Advocate, a hugely influential global bi-monthly wine publication these days dispensing advice to wine consumers around the world via a team of high-flying palates. A huge number of wines are assessed annually and rated employing Parker's 50-100-point quality scale that, given his global standing, can have a significant effect on the success or failure of the reviewed wine.

Parker's interest in wine was piqued in 1967 when he spent a month in Alsace, and he returned home to ultimately replace his fledgling legal career with that of a wine critic writing independent guides for American consumers. Parker and The Wine Advocate hit their global stride when he successfully predicted the superior quality of the 1982 vintage in Bordeaux, his enthusiasm creating significant American interest in Wine Futures, also known as En Primeur (purchasing wines while still in barrel), and raising the price of the vintage. His influence these days is such that it is suggested that some producers wait until he releases his scores before they release their prices.

The highly successful publication has been expanded and is now presented online as well via erobertparker.com, and Parker has gone on to sell a majority stake in his vinous empire to Singaporean interests. Parker continues to write for The Wine Advocate and to be the face of it; however behind him is a comprehensive 'dream team' of critics, including editor-in-chief Lisa Perotti-Brown, Neal Martin, Monica Larner, Jeb Dunnick, Luis Gutiérrez and David Schildknecht, with each writer responsible for an individual area of expertise.

WINESTATE

Australia's oldest wine publication, Winestate have garnered wide ranging respect for their in-depth and incisive dissertations; and they're suitably on the ball, being comfortably ensconced in both the print and online worlds. Launched in 1978, they are now one of the longest-running wine magazines and wine-buying guides in the world, assessing and rating over 10,000 wines each year, and they are leading authorities on the wines of Australia and New Zealand.

Winestate take something of a holistic approach, focusing not on a single competition and a specific set of wines, instead reacting from a viewpoint a little more overarching in nature, with regions assessed periodically and new releases included. The results are published in the magazine, with the reviewed wines awarded a star rating.

Judging is done using the International 20-point scale, with points awarded for colour, aroma and flavour, as well as more technical qualities, including the balance of sugars, acids, tannins and volatile acidity. Panels consist of three judges, with the marks averaged. The New Zealand panel chair is Michael Cooper. For the last few years, he has been joined by Glengarry General Manager Liz Wheaden and Cameron Douglas MS for one of the New Zealand regional tastings.

METRO TOP 100

An initiative started just over five years ago by Metro Magazine, The Metro Top 100 is a little different to the average wine competition. All the usual components are present, i.e. the wines are tasted blind by experienced judges and their quality assessed, but here, the object is to establish an annual range of dependable drinking wines, with the selection encompassing all aspects of global and pricing spectrums.

Currently, more than 700 wines are tasted and evaluated, covering the varietals, and from sparkling expressions right through to dessert wines, with the panel focused on immediate drinkability rather than on technical issues.

It is a competition that Glengarry is pleased to support. We host the judging each year, all of it executed in blind tastings and without any commercial bias. This year, the judging team of chief wine judge Paul Tudor MW was joined by Glengarry Wellington Regional Manager Philip Rowe, a man with a wealth of international wine experience.

Panel members also included Glengarry Bassett Road Manager Rowena Evans, who has a background in winemaking and online wine marketing, and Regan McCaffery, our Fine Wine Consultant at Glengarry Victoria Park, his passion for and intimate understanding of the world's fine wines providing an added dimension to the team.

AIR NZ WINE AWARDS

The Air New Zealand Wine Awards have long been our country's premier wine competition. Behind the valuable long-term sponsorship from our airline and flag carrier, it is a little-known fact that the awards are actually owned and organised by New Zealand Wine Growers, the national organisation for the country's 1,700 grape growers and winemakers.

Since 2011, Michael Brajkovich MW has been the chair of judging, assisted by a host of New Zealand's most experienced wine tasters and an array of international guests. The competition has now been running for over 30 years and continues to be held in high esteem.

The medal-oriented Air NZs recently rejigged things. Now, all of the wines submitted must be sustainably produced, in line with NZWGs' commitment to a fully sustainable industry, a concept with great merit in these days of increasing awareness that more sustainable practices are not only preferable, but in the long term, essential to our future viability.

The medals awarded are Bronze, Silver, Gold and Elite Gold, with the Elite Gold wines having scored 19 and above out of 20 points. The results come out in November each year following judging a few months prior, and they provide a good indication of how each year's new vintage releases are looking.

JULES TAYLOR MARLBOROUGH PINOT NOIR 2013

$26.99 13695

CASE OF 12 $24.99 A BOTTLE

While rightfully lauded for her brilliant whites, Jules is no slouch with the red grapes. Wild berries on the nose, with spicy notes layered over subtle hints of oak. Wild fermentation and extended lees maturation have added complexity and texture to the bright and poised red fruit characters.

IWSC

One of the world's oldest wine events, the formerly monikered Club Oenologique, was launched in 1969 by oenologist Anton Massel. In 1978 the name was changed to the International Wine and Spirit Competition. The original aim of the IWSC was to award excellence in wines and spirits on a global stage, and this remains the agenda, encouraging consumer and trade recognition of quality products.

The IWSC is the only competition of its kind that conducts full 'double' blind tastings (glasses are pre-poured in a separate room) by panels selected from over 300 fully qualified industry judges, followed by an extensive chemical analysis.

The New Zealand judging chair for the IWSC is Jo Burzynska, who is also wine writer for the NZ Herald. For many years now Glengarry have partnered with the IWSC to promote its New Zealand results to the folks back home; it always seemed a shame to us that there were exceptional Kiwi wines winning big in London, where the awards are presented, and not being recognised for it back home.

The awards are judged in similar fashion to the Air New Zealand Wine Awards, with the allocation of gold, silver and bronze medals within the various categories. Standards are strictly adhered to, and in divisions where the products do not score highly enough, no gold medals or trophies are given.

A TASTE OF JAPAN

Japan. Enigmatic and alluring in equal measure. Known for its skyscraping standards when it comes to manufacturing, Japan has an almost unequalled reputation for attention to detail. The Japanese approach to alcohol is no different, and the national obsession with quality control is delivering an ever-increasing and exciting range of classy tipples with their own unique flavour profiles.

Japan's quality factor is impressively evident in its whiskies, which were initially modelled on Scottish styles. However since the establishment of the first commercial distillery just 90-odd years ago, Japanese whiskies have evolved their own unique, multi-faceted characteristics that have earned the world's respect.

Of course, the Japanese concoction known the world over is sake. Easily the most famous of Japanese drinks, this alcoholic beverage made from fermented rice is produced in a variety of distinctive styles, via a brewing process that's more akin to beer than to wine. Normally possessing a high alcohol content of 18-20% (often diluted with water after brewing to a more amenable 14-16%), it can be enjoyed either chilled, at room temperature or heated.

In Japan they occasionally do cider too, with brewing company Kirin producing an appealing range of premium expressions infused with Japanese-inspired flavours that are well worth checking out. Judging by the proliferation of Kiwis these days frequenting sushi bars, it would appear that a taste for Japanese flavours is on the rise, and so we feature here, for your personal edification, a selection of ciders, sakes and whiskies from the Land of the Rising Sun.
