CHARD FARM'S MASON VINEYARD

SINGLE VINEYARD WINES

All of the wines below come from a single vineyard; varying in size, but each of them comprised of one continuous stretch of vines. The winemakers are able to blend this fruit into harmonious regional, or broader, blends, but they choose not to, opting instead to focus our attention on what a wine from a precise part of their world tastes like. For whatever reason, whether it's the proximity to the sea, the rain hole, the wind aspect, the vine age or something no one has quite yet managed to define, these single vineyards produce wines that evoke the singular qualities of their birthplace. They are to be appreciated as an exquisite expression of their place in the world. The French call it terroir.

WINEMAKER MALCOLM REES FRANCIS

PINOT NOIR

ROCKBURN TURNS 21

Our favourite Central Otago Winery has just turned 21 and what a 21 years it has been. Rockburn started as Hayes Lake, a winemaking venture that surgeon Dick Brunton purchased and fell in love with. It wasn't the best vineyard site, nor let's face it the best wine, but it's what got it all started. From there Dick quickly worked out (he thought) what he had to do and knew he needed cash. Enter two old friends, Paul Halford and Chris James. Three winemakers later (the first Greg Hay, then Rudi Bauer and now Malcolm Rees Francis), Rockburn has turned 21, has a host of beautiful vineyards and a new winery in Cromwell. At their 21st Birthday recently, I was invited to speak about Rockburn and drew on a conversation I'd had earlier in the day with Malcolm. He'd asked what customers were looking for, what was the latest. I replied that, wines that are authentic, honest and reliable and on trend. He seemed to have hoped for a different answer, something that led to new toys in the winery or experimenting; let's face it, no winemaker likes to be told, you are doing a bloody good job, keep doing it! Rockburn have recently been awarded a Platinum award by Decanter, so seems it's not just me that thinks this.

PORT

A fortified wine produced from indigenous grapes grown in terraced vineyards in the upper reaches of the Douro River in northern Portugal, Port is one of the most glorious styles in the world. Often left to languish until the end of the meal, it can be overlooked. With the quality, not to mention the sheer range now available in NZ, it's time you jumped on the bandwagon and sampled the versatile array of pleasures to be found at your fingertips, from a White Port and tonic to a chilled Ruby aperitif, a Tawny Port cocktail to a postprandial tippie of LBV. There is, after all, currently plenty of room up there, given port's somewhat under-the-radar tendencies.

Port styles can be differentiated by colour, length of time in bottle as opposed to cask, or those that are dated or undated.

Ruby Port is the first rung on the ladder; vividly coloured, strong Ports that have a fiery nature to them. Following rapid extraction of colour and tannins, the fermentation is stopped by the addition of spirit, thus fortifying the wine and retaining residual sugar. Undergoing a very short maturation period in Port terms, they are then blended, filtered and bottled.

Tawny Port is the next level, the term referring to the maturation in wood turning the wine a tawny colour. There is a fairly wide range of styles that can be a little confusing; these are Ports that have been aged, and as such are more mellow in nature than their ruby siblings. Aged Tawny ports, with statements such as 10-year or 20-year or more on the label are the approximate ages when tasted and approved.

Vintage Port makes up less than one percent of the total produced. Made from grapes from a single vintage, these are bottled after two to three years in wood. They are made from grapes off the very best vineyards, and not all years are declared a vintage, with only the best achieving this status. The declaration process takes place the second year after harvest. Unlike the other styles, Vintage Ports require time in the bottle to mature and express their full character.

Late Bottled Vintage Port is quite the treat; as the name suggests, it is late bottled, from a single year. With the maturation done prior to bottling, these are similar in style to a Vintage Port, but bottled ready to enjoy. They are wonderfully complex wines, softer and more approachable than full Vintage Ports.

White Port is a wonderful stand-alone aperitif, as well as being excellent with tonic or soda (proceed exactly as you would with gin or vodka). White Port is made in the same way as Ruby Port, without the skin contact and the resulting colour. Most White Ports are aged for 18 months in an inert vessel before bottling.

AKARUA

Established in 1996 in Central Otago's Bannockburn region, Akarua is the largest privately-owned estate in Central Otago, with an impressive five vineyards in Central Otago and 123 ha in total across Pisa and Bannockburn. Of this hefty vineyard ownership, 94.36 ha (to be very exact) are under production.

The majority of the vineyards are planted in their signature Pinot Noir, the wines extracted from soils that are generally broken schist and sand. There are extremes of hot and cold, with frosts in winter and dry nor'westers that devigorate the vines. At Akarua, they put a lot of focus on the quality of the fruit, and in the winery, they employ minimalist, gentle techniques that allow the wines to express the purity of fruit and terroir.

Akarua's consistency is impressive, their wines right up there with the best on offer. Their Pinot Noir has garnered, over the last six vintages, no less than 12 trophies and 28 Gold Medals. Andrew Keenleside leads the winemaking team. His considerable experience in Central Otago, particularly with Akarua's vineyards and winemaking facilities, stands him in good stead when flying the flag for the winery's lofty benchmark.

GLASS WITH CLASS

JANCIS DOES GLASSWARE

'Why do we need 10 different glasses for our 10 different wines?' we hear you ask. That's a very good question. Esteemed British wine critic Jancis Robinson has been peering, sniffing, tasting and spitting for quite some time, and when she says, 'You don't,' we listen. After much careful and meticulous work by London designer Richard Brendon, who has employed some of the finest master glass blowers in Europe, they have come up with One Glass to Rule Them All (with the possible exception of vintage champagne, which is apparently on the run with The Precious). It is specifically designed to offer the optimum tasting experience for every wine, regardless of style or strength. When you consider what you might spend on a multitude of high-quality glassware styles, this is actually a pretty fabulous option. We're offering the two-glass pack, because you wouldn't want to be drinking on your own, now, would you?

97580 TWO GLASSES BY JANCIS ROBINSON+RICHARD BRENDON $170.00

No.1 FAMILY ESTATE

METHODE MAESTROS

'Making champagne is in my blood,' opines Daniel le Brun. Yes, we imagine Daniel's system is pretty much running on sparkling wine by now, not least because the first record of a le Brun messing about in Champagne is from 1750, and that's a lot of DNA under the bridge. Since first setting up in NZ, the meticulous le Bruns have specialised exclusively in the production of méthode traditionnelle wines, in the process fashioning an impressive portfolio of sparkling styles. Their wines come packaged in a variety of cool giftboxes and neoprene bags, and will make an awfully nice present for someone special.

A TASTE OF SPAIN

SPLENDIDLY SPANISH

The Spanish do a great job of channelling that wonderful European sensibility that says life is all about putting the right wine with the right food, and the right company, and just going for it. In one of the oldest vinous cultures in Europe, food and wine are deeply instilled within the Spanish soul. Having worked out where the local varieties thrive, they are coaxing beautiful, unique styles from the often unforgiving viticultural landscape. These are fragrant, exotic, heady, muscular, succulent, sexy wines that have converted a generation to their fold.
